Recharge learning by revamping your classroom.

Does classroom design affect learning? Yes!

Table arrangement is another easy yet impactful way to revamp your classroom. Grouped table configurations can help to support communication and collaboration as well as a sense of community.

Simple changes to your classroom can result in more engaged students and where teachers are better able to achieve improved learning outcomes.

Student choice on how they learn is an important factor in learning outcomes. It creates ownership over their learning. Easy ways to achieve this is to provide various options in a flexible classroom such as:

- ✓ Cushions and floor seats
- ✓ Standing desks
- ✓ Flexi stools
- ✓ Lounges, ottomans and armchairs

Research has shown that classroom design can affect student learning outcomes by up to 16% (Building and Environment Journal, volume 89, 2015).

Ready to take advantage of the benefits of classroom design?

If you're ready to revamp your classroom or the learning environments in your school, let us help. Book an appointment with your local MTA sales representative who can assist.

Types of Learning Spaces

A great way to design a learning space is to use the Campfire, Cave and Watering Hole method. David Thornburg¹ identified these spatial typologies, and they provide an excellent structure for designing a classroom around different learning styles.

Campfires

The campfire is a space where individuals gather and have a single focal point (expert). Campfire spaces facilitate teacher-led and student-led learning and supports the presentation of ideas, questions and answers. Individuals come together in large groups to gather knowledge. Examples of this type of space are traditional classroom or lecture theatres.

Caves

This type of space encourages self-reflection and quiet learning. It is a private environment that supports individual and reflective learning. Caves can be removed from the general learning space, be semi-enclosed or even just a quiet nook inside a greater classroom. These spaces offer a sense of security, calm and quiet.

Watering Holes

A watering hole is an informal space that supports peer-to-peer interaction. Collaboration, discussion, mentoring and guidance are promoted. It is a social space that can support a sense of belonging and culture. Watering holes are often used in small group work and task-orientated learning.

¹ Thornburg, D. 2007, "Campfires in cyberspace: primordial metaphors for learning in the 21st century." International Journal of Instructional Technology and Distance Learning, vol.1, no.10, October 2004.

Learning Spaces

Campfire

- ✓ Single focal point
- ✓ Expert-led learning
- ✓ Presentation of ideas

Cave

- ✓ Quiet spaces for learning
- ✓ Offers privacy and calm
- ✓ Reflection and autonomy

Watering Hole

- ✓ Peer to peer learning
- ✓ Promotes collaboration and discussion
- ✓ Informal and social spaces

Collaboration & Discussion

Collaborative spaces in classrooms support discussion and group work, and they offer social spaces for students to share thinking and grow relationships. The “watering hole” design is often used and the furniture is flexible in design and can be combined together for larger groups. Seating is lightweight and comfortable, and can be used with tables or independently. A range of seating heights and choices is important in collaborative learning spaces to allow students to choose how they learn. It is good practice to offer a variety of table options such as whiteboard tables, low tables and standing desks.
